ALBUQUERQUE.....NEW MEXICO

SUNDAY MORNING, OCTOBER 29, 1905.

Let Everyone Help

Now that the town is practically organized for charity work, everyone should make up his mind to help, even if it be but very little. If we will all do our duty in this matter, a very little from each will be sufficient, and the burden will not be onerous upon anyone. We bespeak for the canvassing committee a generous reception, and trust that every citizen will be prepared when called upon, to put down his name for a liberal monthly contribution.

In view of the fact that an organization of this character here will have a tendency to attract to Albuquerque more than our proper share of indigent invalids, and to encourage other towns to still further "unload" upon us, it would be well for the society to give notice through all the newspapers that it will not undertake to assist any person of the class mentioned who has not been here at least three months. A man who is not able pecuniarily able to bear the cost of taking care of himself for that length of time, has no right to leave home and acquaintances and make himself a burden upon strangers; but experience has shown that there are a good many sick people absolutely penniless, who think if they "can only get to Albuquerque" they will be "all right"—and some of our neighbors seem to be perfectly willing to encourage them in this belief, and to assist them in getting here. Such a notice as we have referred to would discourage this business and enable us to take better care of the poor that we have with us always.

A Terrible Arraignment

Wonderful progress has been made by the press of the United States during the last few years in the direction of independent journalism. Everyone can remember the time not so very long ago, when if a man, no matter how unworthy, were nominated by "the party," no matter by what methods, it was regarded as the imperative duty of every paper in the state or district to be blind to all the blemishes upon his character and support him as earnestly as though he were the most honest and upright man in the country.

Three years ago this paper placed at the head of its columns this announcement:

"The Morning Journal is the leading Republican paper of New Mexico, supporting the principles of the Republican party all the time and the methods of the Republican party when they are right."

This very mild statement of the policy which the Morning Journal intended to pursue was regarded by some party people as bordering upon party infidelity, and indeed a number of these persons who think the whole of republicanism is to vote the ticket straight, declared that the Morning Journal had "left the party." We call attention to this incident in our own experience for the purpose of introducing the following editorial from the Philadelphia Press, in opposition to the present republican "machine" ticket in Pennsylvania. And it must be remembered that the North America and a score of other staunch republican papers in the state are every day giving expression and prominence to similar sentiments—all of which serves to illustrate how the American press has "moved up" toward independence of the politicians in the last few years. Says the Press:

"The dark list of tragedies associated with the state treasury receives a melancholy addition, and the pestilent system which makes the state funds the prey of the state ring is illustrated in the crash of another bank."

"The story of the explosion at Allegheny, with its suicide, its robbery and its wreck, is startling. And yet, in one form or another, sooner or later, it has been expected. In the nature of the case it was inevitable. It is the natural result of the infamous ruse of the state treasury for forty years."

"The manner in which the state funds have been exploited by what may fairly be called the state gang has long been an open secret. From time to time a lurid light has been let in upon it. One tragedy after another has marked the successive crises which have followed the daring, reckless and unscrupulous misuses of state money. More than once it has seemed as if the lid was about to be lifted and the whole record of iniquities laid bare. But the desperation of despair has each time succeeded in holding it down and staving off the ultimate exposure. Has the limit at last been reached?"

"Under this system the state treasury has been the most important of all the state offices to the gang—far more important than even the governorship itself. The treasurer was simply their tool, and they used the funds in his custody at their pleasure. The state money was applied to the personal and political ends of the gang."

"The deposits were made upon condition of loans. They were employed to bribe banks and bankers. They were put where they would do the most good to the members of the ring. In some cases the money was boldly taken from the treasury and loaned into the whirlpool of speculation. Suicides there have been from the awful stress of loss and still more illustrious suicides only barely averted."

"The present instance is a peculiarly flagrant exhibition. The president of the wrecked bank is said to have exclaimed when he realized the ruin: 'This will break the republican machine.' The bank has been robbed by a lot of politicians. Unhappily too true, that is, unhappily as to the latter of the two statements. A large amount of state money was deposited and then loaned out to gang favorites on worthless securities. As in this particular bank and its transactions the lid is off and the rottenness is uncovered. Is the day of reckoning to end here?"

"This startling revelation is only an index of other iniquities which lie yet behind the veil. It will impress the people with the necessity of taking the lid off altogether, and going to the bottom of the seething pot. It will undoubtedly intensify the feeling, already so strong all over the state, that it is a matter of public duty and safety to elect a state treasurer who is not under the control of the ring, and who can be trusted to turn the treasury inside out and stop the long continued and monstrous misuse of public money."

"The effect of this explosion, coming at this stage of the campaign, will be the deepened suspicions it arouses, will be disastrous to the machine. It lifts the question which the people will weigh far above all party and political considerations to the demands of the highest public interest and obligations."

THE comparison made by the department of commerce between the duties now imposed by Germany on goods imported from the United States and the duties that will be in effect against them next March unless Germany's new maximum tariff is modified in our favor is not reassuring. The prospective rates are in many cases prohibitory. The rate on wheat is advanced 112 per cent, on wheat flour 157 per cent, on corn 212 per cent, on dried fruit 150 per cent, on bacon 30 per cent, on pork 176 per cent, and on beef 200 per cent. On manufactured articles the increases are also large—shoes 70 to 177 per cent, machinery 40 to 1150 per cent, sewing machines 46 per cent, and so on.

It seemed like the "good old times" to see Jesse Wheelock on the street yesterday. He is prospering in his new home, but still has a warm spot under his vest for Albuquerque—and Albuquerque will cheerfully "set along" and make room for him whenever he wants to come back.

RECIPES FOR VARIOUS JAGS

"Is there any difference in jags?" repeated the old barkeeper; well, I should kiss a goat. There's no two alike. Of course, there's always the headache attachment, the early-morning thirst and the inclination to dodge when nobody's trying to soak you—but, to come down to a closer analysis, jags are the most different things on earth.

"Everybody knows there's a heap of difference in whiskey. Why, shouldn't there be a variety of jags? In the first place there are different kinds of men. They drink for different reasons, and want different kinds of booze. In the dawn of inebriety beer will do all right, but there is a stage where beer merges into red liquor, just as certain as there is a time of the day when you can step on the head of your shadow."

"Some folks call that the zenith, or something, but the fellows that stand before the big mirror call it the limit. There's when an apple brandy would buckle on your skates and a creme de menthe would make you bark at the trolley cars."

"Different causes lead to drink and different drinks lead to the police station. A man will get drunk when he inherits a fortune just the same as when he loses one. It takes an expert to say which reason is the right one, and even then the dope often goes wrong."

"Wronged love figures to win in nearly every jag handicap where the starters are in the maiden class. Four-year-old drink because the barkeepers need the money."

"A jag inspired by misplaced affection is a sad sight, and a barkeeper that doesn't soften up and tell the young fellow that Mayme is a good-for-nothing flirt and that the man who marries her will rue it to his dying day, ain't got any right to belong to the union. Neither has the fellow as he knocks the fiddle Mayme, just so long will the lad one continue to buy."

"Now, as to the selling plaster, the procedure is different. I don't know anything but whiskey and fire. Lunch, romance with him is as dead as Nan Patterson's starting tour. He gets his drink after the bell has rung on the cash register. He also gets it out if he back drives home. If he says something about bottled-in-bond goods we turn the key stare on him, and if that don't work, it's the hose. He's entitled to one pretzel, but a hard look goes with it."

"Everybody knows there's different kinds of jags. There's the feel-like-you-own-the-earth jag, the 'ain't-got-no-poor-kin' jag, the 'best-little-man-of-your-size-in-town' jag, the crying jag, the merry jag, the 'wifey's-gone-away-from-home' jag, and the 'want-to-treat-the-house' jag."

"For that John D. Rockefeller feeling I recommend champagne on a nightfall foundation. It's safe, and sure, and will stick to you like a porcupine plaster to a lame back. You remember that Billy Baxter said something about the Standard Oil company being the smallest thing he owned when in a certain condition. Well, with the proper mixture of extra dry and bourbon highballs the Bank of England becomes just the proper thing to drop into the blind fiddler's cup. The only sad thing about it is that the richer you feel in the evening the poorer you are the next morning."

"That's a hunch right from the power house. I've known the time when I might as well have been a strike in the mine so far as I was concerned, and those days followed nights when a twenty-dollar bill looked meaner than a corn pad."

"For an old-time funeral jag drink four gin rickys, then switch to an absche frappe. You'll find words that you didn't know were in your mind at all. You'll talk about anything, from what to eat after bringing fever to the best way of bringing up a politician's pants. Second frappe will make the doctors look like mushrooms. There's nothing to it. I've seen fellows take buzzards for canary birds, and I guess that's going some."

"To successfully build one of those best-little-man-of-my-size-in-town jags you must first go to the corner grocery. Don't stop in the grocery, or if you do, merely look at the picture of the cow on the soda packages. As soon as you can edge through get into the bar and stay there till the boss tells you to get out. Don't ask any foolish questions about the booze. Drink what he sets before you, and ask for another. If the bottle has a label with a landscape on it, so much the quicker. Ask for that bottle every time."

"What do barkeepers drink? Well, now, that's hardly fair. If the very man is treating, and the boss is on the bar, it's something expensive, as they value their jobs. I know some barkeepers though that occasionally take a cherry phosphate or when alone. They never let the union hear of it, I thought and nearly all of them have a friend or two who can keep it out of the papers."—Louisville Post.

Timely Suggestions

We are surrounded by suggestions of approaching winter, but the most suggestive thing to be seen is our large line of High Grade Heaters. They suggest to the mind and picture to the eye howling winds and drifting snow on the outside, and a warm glow within, which is the result of the highest art in stove-making. It radiates a glowing warmth evenly all over the room, or two or three rooms if you have them connected.
